12) The duty of the night watch of the office including Cash Section should be done by the Office Menial Establishment as is generally done in other offices. With a little care it may be found possible to arrange for the night watch also either by a re-distribution of the whole menial staff or by curtailing the number allotted for pahara duty, reserve and to the General Despatcher, which according to the statement put up in another file was 10, 14 and 17 respectively. Under the circumstances the Police Establishment need not, I think, be continued and made permanent.

27) In 1898, a staff of four police constables was tentatively<sup>x</sup> sanctioned for guard duty of the General and Revenue Secretariat as the ordinary night watch that could be provided by the office was found quite inadequate for the purpose and a series of thefts, etc. occurred in consequence. The establishment has been in existence for nearly 18 years and the General Secretary represents that there is absolute necessity for such a special guard for this large and important office and that it may be made permanent.

28) 2. The Financial Secretary considers that the duty of the night watch of the office should be performed by the menial establishment of the General and Revenue Secretariat and that it may be possible to arrange for the night watch also either by a redistribution of the whole menial staff or by curtailing the number allotted for pahra duty and reserve and to the General Despatcher.

29) 3. Considerable retrenchment<sup>x</sup> of the menial establishment was effected in 1908 and further reduction is not possible at present.

30) 4. The number of men on pahra duty is 10. They work in three shifts and the number available for each shift is only three which is quite inadequate to keep watch over the large area occupied by the General and Revenue Secretariat.

5. There is practically no 'Reserve' establishment, as most of the men included in that category have been detailed for special work not provided for in the regular sanctioned scale.
